An Interview With Schorr, Nelson and

MAURY POVICH: On January 25th of this year, Daniel Schorr, the CBS network correspondent, of the not-yet, and subsequently never-to-be, Intelligence Committee report on government spy activities. Little did Schorr, who had been way out front on CIA coverage in this town, or anyone else know that this fact of revealing the contents of the report would trigger a string of events that led to Schorr's suspension at CBS, a House investigation and Justice Department investigation into who leaked the report to him.

Daniel Schorr is 59 years old. For 23 years he has worked for CBS. There have been bright moments; there have been dark ones. His relationship with the network has been as turbulent as any reporter, and yet he has remained employed there. Quite possibly, that relationship will end soon. There are many who believe it will. If it does, the primary reason, no doubt, would be Schorr's decision to give the only leaked copy of the intelligence report to The Village Voice, an anti-establishment newspaper, for publication, out of Schorr's view that the public should have the right to know.

Another defendant of that right, the most zealous believer in the First Amendment of the Constitution I know, is here tonight, John Henry Faulk. Mr. Faulk has also had his troubles with CBS. He, too, worked for that network; a victim of the McCarthy Communist baiting in the 1950s, he was blacklisted. John Henry Faulk has spent much of his adult life fighting that. He fought it and he won, and it was no Pyrrhic victory.

In a moment, Daniel Schorr and John Henry Faulk will join me on Panorama.
